The language you speak can change your personality and your life. In 2013, a study in the US showed that Spanish speakers were more outgoing than English speakers. The study tested over 200 people on their confidence levels and asked them about their lives. It found that Spanish speakers were more confident and enjoyed parties and meeting new people. English speakers were shyer and more liked to stay at home and read books. Another study in 2015 looked at bilingual people. These are people who speak two or more languages. The study found that when these people spoke different languages, they acted differently. For example, one Woman from Turkey said she was quiet and shy when she spoke Turkish. But when she spoke English, she was loud and confident. She also told more jokes and had more friends. The study also found that when people spoke different languages, they made different decisions. For example, when bilingual people played a game in their first language, they were more careful and took less risks. Sending emails, posting photos, watching online videos, and downloading music may seem harmless, but our online habits have a surprising impact on the environment. The impact of our online activities on the environment is called " internet pollution. "

۳

We use electricity to process data, send it over the internet, and power our devices. A single message each of us posts on social media may not have a huge impact on the environment, but when billions of people do it every day, it does. Or the energy we need to power one small digital device may not be much, but when billions of them are connected to the internet, it adds up quickly.

The first step to reducing internet pollution is to help people understand what their digital footprint is and how it affects the environment. This can be done through education and awareness campaigns. The next step is to develop technologies that can reduce the energy consumption of our devices and services. This can be done by using renewable energy sources and more efficient data centers. Google, for example, uses solar panels and wind farms to power its data centers.

Electric cars don't burn gasoline in the engine, so they don't make the air dirty and unclean. They use electricity stored on the car in batteries. The electric car is usually plugged in at night. The car can be plugged into a special charging unit even at houses. Some electric cars can be plugged right into a regular electrical wall outlet. Others need a larger outlet, like the kind that a stove or a vacuum cleaner plugs into. The engineers are trying to make better batteries that hold more energy and last longer. To overcome the problem of charging electric cars, hybrid cars are also available. Hybrid cars combine the benefits of gasoline engines and electric motors. They can be designed to meet different goals, such as better fuel economy or more power. ❖ True/False 52) Cars that burn fossil fuels should replace electric cars. a) True b) False 53) You can charge all electric cars by a regular wall outlet. a) True b) False ❖ Answer the following questions. 54) What are the benefits of hybrid cars? 55) How do electric cars get their energy to move?	O
